

I do not think that the FCC should implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. I have been on Indiana's "do not call" list for almost a year and it has been wonderful. I used to receive over 10 calls a week. Now I don't receive any calls from telemarketers. This is an amazing improvement. It's so nice knowing that when the phone rings it is someone I actually want to talk to. I really do not want to hear from any companies that consider me an "existing customer." If they want to let me know what they're offering, they can send me the information in the mail, which is much less intrusive. Thank you for your time.
